The upcoming round of grants, Round 2, 2014 offered by the Office of Learning and Teaching (OLT) is only for Seed Projects and for those projects which have already been successful as Expressions of Interest in the previous round. It closes internally on Thursday 29th May.

Seed Projects can be:
- pilot projects which test and evaluate an original idea, including those that plan to build into full proposals
- single-institution, small scale projects
- pilot projects
- projects to build the capacity of early career academics, including projects which are led by early career academics.

Proposed Seed Projects can address any of the priorities in the Innovation and Development or Leadership for Excellence programs, or any other topic, and can run for a maximum of 12 months. If you are interested in applying for a Seed Project grant, see the ITL webpage and register for the workshop on Thursday 8 May.

The second round of grants in 2014, Round 1, 2015, is scheduled for November. It is expected to include full applications, EOIs and Seed Project applications. If you are considering applying in that round it's worth starting now as the best applications are carefully planned. For example, full applications require partnerships with other institutions and successful partnerships take time to build.

Other grants offered by the OLT include Extension Grants, which support the continued dissemination and embedding of completed learning and teaching projects. These may be projects funded within institutions, or by one of the OLT's predecessor bodies.
