Applications now open for a postgraduate course in university teaching

The Graduate Certificate in Educational Studies (Higher Education) is a postgraduate award course offered through the Faculty of Education and Social Work and taught by the Institute for Teaching and Learning. It is an advanced program of study building on candidates' university teaching experience.

Research shows that staff who complete the Graduate Certificate have more satisfied students and are more likely to win teaching awards.

Graduates say that the course gives them 'permission' and the 'space' to reflect on and enhance their teaching practice.

The course consists of four core units of study over two semesters. Entry requirements are that all intending participants in the course must:

- Be engaged in some university teaching in semester 1 in the year in which they enrol; and
- Have completed the University's Principles and Practice of University Teaching and Learning program

Course fees for the Graduate Certificate are waived by the University for University of Sydney staff, provided staff have permanent residency/citizenship status. To avoid paying course fees you will need to provide certified copies of evidence of your employment at the University; this can include a copy of your staff ID card or a copy of your pay slip. Please note that there is no mid year intake.

For more information click here, or contact the course coordinator Dr Graham Hendry.

To begin your application to the course, click here.