Consultation on changes to some student survey systems

The University is renewing its suite of student teaching and learning feedback surveys. The current revisions are in response to recent changes in the Australian government’s survey system, and to support new strategies the University is developing to further enhance the quality of teaching and learning at Sydney.

The main changes will be a wider use of some existing national surveys and to the Unit of Study Evaluation (USE) system. All surveys will move to fully online mode, be aligned to enhance usefulness and support important elements of the new education strategy. Further information on the changes is available here.

An important first stage of this work is consultation with the University community on the proposed survey changes. Faculties have been invited to discuss the proposed changes and to provide feedback to the DVC (Education) by 28 November via their SEG Education committee representative.
