The UK based National Union of Students (NUS) has produced a range of insightful resources to help universities and staff benchmark local arrangements and processes for student partnership in learning and teaching. Individual staff, teaching teams, departments, and faculties are invited by the NUS to use the resources to assess their commitment to, and resourcing of, pedagogical initiatives designed to engage students more fully in learning and teaching. The benchmarking tools focus on three areas and are based on research-informed principles:

- Feedback and Assessment
- Course organisation and management
- Learning resources

The NUS are keen that the resources "provoke constructive conversations between staff and students and lead to tangible changes in practice". Further benchmarking tools are planned for academic support and personal tutoring. The NUS are also keen to hear from staff who decide to use the tool in their local contexts. Contact Kate Little at NUS, Senior Project Officer.